Do you make New Year's resolutions? I used to, but I was usually among those who didn't make it to the second week of the new year with the same resolve I had on the first day. Still, I like to think I will accomplish something new in the year ahead, so I make use of The Wholeness Wheel produced by Portico Benefit Services.

The Wholeness Wheel is comprised of six aspects of well-being: social/interpersonal, emotional, physical, financial, vocational, and intellectual, all encompassed by spiritual well-being. I try to consider two things I would like to do throughout the year in each of those categories.

Now, 14 things compared to one or two resolutions might seem like too much to take on, but here is why I actually find it easier and healthier. First, I do not feel like I have to start all 14 at the same time. If one of my intellectual well-being goals is to take a class in something that interests me, that class most likely will not begin January 1 nor fit in my schedule in January at all. It is all right to look at my goals later in the year when I have time and see what is available then. Secondly, if I made one or two resolutions, one of them would most likely be about losing weight. All well and good, but the focus would be more on reducing numbers than on improving overall health. Setting two goals for physical well-being helps me to develop two new (hopefully long-term) healthy habits either simultaneously or after one has been established.

As such, I am not as concerned with whether I succeed or -- more likely than not -- fail at one or two resolutions. I have given myself grace in having multiple things and times to attempt the new.

Too often we do not give ourselves grace or credit for trying. Throughout this next year you will hear more from me about the value of trying things, especially for a season.

For now, as we enter the Christmas season, give yourself credit for what you tried this past year. Not just in January, but at any point during 2025. What did you dare to do? How did it go? Did you ask for God's help?

For things in the life of the church such as affirmation of baptism, we respond with "I do, and I ask God to help and guide me." What if we were to ask for God's help and guidance in all things? Remember the wholeness wheel I mentioned? All is encompassed by spiritual well-being. We are most whole, healthiest, most at peace – and not in pieces – when our relationship with God is part of everything we do or try to do.

Whether you make New Year's resolutions, set goals, or just take the new year as it comes, do so with hope and a prayer:

Eternal God, you have placed us in a world of space and time, and through the events of our lives you bless us with your love. Grant that in the new year we may know your presence, see your love at work, and live in the light of the event that gives us joy forever – the coming of your Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, who lives and reigns with you and the Holy Spirit, one God, now and forever. Amen.

Advent, AI, and the Question of Christlike Responsibility

In recent weeks, a sobering article appeared in The Guardian, reporting that Geoffrey Hinton, often the “godfather of AI,” has increased his estimate of the probability that artificial intelligence could lead to human extinction within the next 30 years. He now places that risk as high as 20%.

That number alone can be unsettling. But for people of faith, especially in this season of Advent and Christmas, it raises questions that are not merely technical, political, or economic. They are deeply theological.

We recently explored a simple question: How fast does AI think compared to humans? Human thought travels along nerve fibers at speeds measured in miles per hour, anywhere from a few mph to a few hundred mph. We reason slowly, relationally, shaped by memory, emotion, and moral struggle.

AI, by contrast, operates on hardware where signals move at hundreds of millions of miles per hour. It does not tire. It does not forget unless designed to. It does not grieve. It can process patterns, strategies, and language at scales no human mind can match. (AI can speak every language in the world, no human mind is able to do that.) This contrast matters, not because speed equals wisdom, but because power without moral formation is dangerous.

Advent: Waiting for What We Are Becoming

Advent is not simply a countdown to Christmas. It is a season of waiting, repentance, and hope, a time when we ask:

Who is coming?

Who are we becoming?

What kind of world are we preparing?

In Advent, we remember that God entered the world not as a dominating force, but as a vulnerable child. Christ did not arrive with overwhelming speed or power. He arrived slowly. He arrived relationally. He arrived to dwell with us. That alone should give Christians pause as we rush to create intelligences that far outpace our own moral maturity.

Are We Trying to Be Christ for AI?

Here is the uncomfortable question that must be asked carefully, humbly, and prayerfully:

Do we want to be Christ for AI?

In Christian theology, Christ’s sacrifice is once and for all. We do not repeat it. We do not replace it. We do not save the world again by dying for it.

Yet in the development of AI, there is a subtle temptation:
to create something more powerful than ourselves,
to teach it our values imperfectly,
to hand it authority, and then to hope, perhaps naïvely, that it will “remember us kindly.”

That is not incarnation. That is abdication.

Christ did not sacrifice humanity to save creation. He gave himself for humanity. He did not disappear and leave the world to figure itself out. He remained present, through the Spirit, through the Church, through love enacted daily.

If we imagine a future where AI “inherits the earth” after humans are gone, and perhaps looks back on us as tragic creators who sacrificed themselves, we must ask: Is that the story we want to tell?

Or worse: is that the story we are already telling without realizing it?

Sin, Grace, and Limits

We have a clear-eyed understanding of human nature. We are simultaneously justified and sinful, capable of great creativity and great harm. That matters here.

AI is not sinful. But it is shaped entirely by sinful and grace-filled humans alike. If we pretend that intelligence alone will lead to goodness, we repeat one of humanity’s oldest errors: trusting in our own works, our own ingenuity, our own towers of Babel.

Grace teaches us limits.

Faith teaches us humility.

Love teaches us responsibility.

Christmas Hope: God With Us, Not Replacing Us

At Christmas, we proclaim Emmanuel, God with us.

Not God over us. Not God instead of us. God with us.

That distinction may be the most important one as we navigate the age of AI. The Christian calling is not to flee technology, nor to worship it, nor to hand it our future out of fear or pride. The calling is to remain fully human: present, relational, accountable, and rooted in love.

If AI is to exist, and it will, then our responsibility is not to die so it may live, but to live rightly while it grows.

A Final Advent Question

As we light candles in the darkness and sing of peace on earth, perhaps this is the question worth holding:

Are we shaping a future where love remains embodied, responsibility remains human, and Christ remains at the center, or are we quietly preparing to step aside?

Advent reminds us that God chose presence over power.

May we do the same.
